secretaries of the departments, members of the president's cabinet. There is also an advisory commission of seven men, who are experts in their particular lines, to act with the council. Under the provisions of the law creating them it is apparent and becomes more so upon investigation, that this council obviates, in a great measure, the necessity of expansion by the departments to which I have already referred. This council is really the agent of all the departments of the government in so far as it is capable of being in securing all kinds of information pecusiary in the conduct of formation necessary in the conduct of the war. It has limited powers also in the furnishing of materials and men. As the co-cil becomes more and more efficient and capable in the same ra-tio it is of greater service to the nation through the various federal depart-ments, and this being so, the value of organizations in the several states operating more or less under its direction and organized after a common standard, becomes quite impressive. The plan, if completely carried out as it is hoped to do, brings into existence powerful and efficient groups all over the country working hand in hand with the federal government and relieving it of tremendous responsibility and ob-ligations and accomplishing this which
